New York, Sept. 19, 1877.

1'r. Tutt: Dear Sir—During this year I treated nine nundred cases of lung diseases. In the lower wards of the city the cases were of a very severe type. It was there my attention was called to Tutt's Expectorant, and I confess my surprise at its wenderful power. During a practice of twenty years I have never known a medaine to act as promptly and with such happy offects. It instantly subdued the most violen cheese lung medicine I ever used.

Starveling Nobility in Spain.

We have already said that a title was never a granted during the last hundred years or so has certainly not tended to raise its value. The number largely exceeds the united paerages of England Scotland and Ireland; and it is probable that the list does not ire ude all the men in Spain who might write themselves Baron or Count if they chose. There are many men who prefer to drop a title rificulously at variates with their fortunes. You may be shaved by a Marquis or waited upon at a table d'hote by a Barer; and this though all the sons of a noble do not inherit his title, as is the case in some countries. This must happen when titles are given to men who have no fortune. The older nobles refuse to recognize these new men as their equals. While they address one another in the endearing second person singular, used only by very intimate friends, they give the new Count his titles with malicious elaboration of detail. The people think wondrous little of such marks of honor; indeed, they scarcely know them in some cases, Nobady ever thought of speaking of Espartero as Dake of Victory or Prince of Vergara, though all the world know those titles had been conferred on him. In the case of less well known men the title is never mentioned at all. His children will in all probability drop it if their father can leave them no fortune. Perhaps the feet that these honors, if they can be so called, are gained in civil war and often by barrack intrigues, has something to do with the small estimation in which they are held; perhaps, too, the curiously humbled social position of Spanish military men has some influence ou it; but the main reason undoubtedly is that the thing itself has coased to be of much

Perhaps the best explanation that can be given for the continued existence of titles is the Spaniard's inborn love of fine sonorous names and phrases, which mean nothing but fill the car with an imposing sound. If the soldiers who make the history of the country einnot raise the new nobility to dignity still less can the civilians, on whom the shower of titles falls in an almost equally copions manner. Almost without exception they are political intriguers, figanciers, or contractors. The first have spent he mest of their lives in pulling the wires at Madrid, and are locked on very much as prodessional politicans are in the U S. The latter gained have their titles by figancial services to the Government; and in Spain to have been engaged in Government finances is loss of character in itself. So little is a title now considered that a few years ago the Ministry of the hour-in the strict meaning, almost of the word-could think of nothing more appropriat. as a recognition of the service of the ewser of decent provincial paper than to make him a Marquis. The title was never used except by the unfortunate man's cormins - Pall

Too MANY ARTISTS .- An art lecturer of England, and a member of the Royal Academy, lately expressed himself in an address as fearful lest too many people were trying to become artists. The facilities for learning how to draw were great, and the industry was good culture, but knowing what to draw was the puzzle and the reck on which many were wrecking useful lives. All students apparently wanted to be great painters or sculptors, but this required more than mere teaching, which the aspirants could not understand. A good eye and a little training made a tolerable draughtsman, but a great artist is born, not made. The mere draughtsman can go only to the boundaries of mechanism, beyond which art begins. But in these days of art culture and increasing taste everybody wants to be an artist, and good talents in mechanics are being sacrificed to this ambition. The exhibition rooms are being lined with bad pictures, which in art are nothing, but in labor are great. This art monitor directs the attention of mechanical skill to the useful industries of patterns and designs for architec ural ornamentation and other purposes. With more humbleness of aim the increasing art culture could be turned to ligitimate account, and where it now fails to make painters and reulptors it would develop artisans.

"HIS SOUL FOR TWO CENTS."-Speaking of goodness calls to mind an incident that happened in one of our shops this week, showing again the poor side of frail humanity. A man from the neighboring village, wealthy and wellknown as a generous giver to various institutions, and yet close-fisted and penurious withal, was having a little job done in a shop, and as he came for the work an Irishman who had worked for him said to the men: "See me buy his soul for two cents," at the same time laying a two cent piece upon the bench where the work was. The gentleman, seeing the money, after hastily looking about the room to see that no one was looking, picked up the money and put it in his pocket. When he came to pay for his repairs he was charged 27 cents. As he had generally paid but 25 cents for the same work, he inquired what the extra two cents was for, and after some urging he was gently informed that it was to pay the two cents he had picked up. He quickly left the shop .- Springfield Rep.
